There are many legends about Robin Hood. He was a Saxon by birth. He was an outlaw and a robber, but he robbed only the rich and helped the poor. He was a popular legendary character and many English writers mentioned his name in their works, for example Shakespeare and Walter Scott. Together with his friends they lived in Sherwood Forest. But today Sherwood Forest is famous not only as home of Robin Hood, but also as a natural habitat for rare and unique birds, beetles and bats. Sherwood Forest is one of the best natural sites in England, it is a National Nature Reserve. It is most famous for its massive ancient oak trees which have inspired visitors and writers for centuries. There are more than one thousand oaks, some more than five hundred years old. More than one thousand species of beetles and spiders have been found there as well as more than two hundred species of fungi. There, you can also meet some unique animals and birds, such as the great spotted woodpecker, tawny owl, redstart, and a number of bat species. For over six hundred years the forest remained the property of the Crown, was used as a source of timber and grazing and as a hunting ground for the Kings and Queens of England. Today's 200-hectare Sherwood Forest is the first National Nature Reserve in Nottinghamshire.
